PROJECT ON WEB DESIGNING

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

First and foremost, we wish to express our gratitude to the Almighty god for the abundance of wisdom and presence throughout the execution of our project.

We are taking opportunity to express our sincere thanks to our Deputy Director Mr. Sojan Jose with whose permission made this project. We here by acknowledge, with deep sense of gratitude the very valuable advice and guidance of our teacher Mr. Achu Sivadasan, Ms. Deepaca Reglaqoz Fedisha and all other teachers for without whose help it would have impossible to complete this project work. We also express our thanks to all other members in the Institution.

Last but not the least we would like to thank the encouragement given by our classmates and others teachers for supporting in hundred title ways that means a lot.

This leaf of acknowledgement would not be complete without special thanks for their normal support encouragement and love, which enabled to successfully bring out this project.

PROLOGUE
Jude lifted the heavy practice sword, moving into the first stance—readiness.
Get used to the weight, Madoc had told her. You must be strong enough to strike and strike and strike again without tiring. The first lesson is to make yourself that strong.
It will hurt. Pain makes you strong.
That was the first lesson he'd taught her after he'd cut down her parents with a sword not unlike the one she held now. Then she'd been seven, a baby. Now she was nine and lived in Faerieland, and everything was changed.
She planted her feet in the grass. Wind ruffled her hair as she moved through the stances. One; the sword before her, canted to one side, protecting her body. Two; the pommel high, as though the blade were a horn coming from her head. Three: down to her hip, then in a deceptively casual droop in front of her. Then four: up again, to her shoulder. Each position could move easily into a strike or a defense. Fighting was chess, anticipating the move of one's opponent and countering it before one got hit.
But it was chess played with the whole body. Chess that left her bruised and tired and frustrated with the whole world and with herself, too.
Or maybe it was more like riding a bike. When she'd been learning to do that, back in the real world, she'd fallen lots of times. Her knees had been scabby enough that Mom thought she might have scars. But Jude had taken off her training wheels herself and disdained riding carefully on the sidewalk, as Taryn did. Jude wanted to ride in the street, fast, like Vivi, and if she got gravel embedded into her skin for it, well, then she'd let Dad pick it out with tweezers at night.
Sometimes Jude longed for her bike, but there were none in Faerie. Instead, she had giant toads and thin greenish ponies and wild-eyed horses slim as shadows.
And she had weapons.
And her parents' murderer, now her foster father. The High King's general, Madoc, who wanted to teach her how to ride too fast and how to fight to the death. No matter how hard she swung at him, it just made him laugh. He liked her anger. Fire, he called it.
She liked it when she was angry, too. Angry was better than scared. Better than remembering she was a mortal among monsters. No one was offering her the option of training wheels anymore.
On the other side of the field, Madoc was guiding Taryn through a series of stances. Taryn was learning the sword, too, although she had different problems than Jude. Her stances were more perfect, but she hated sparring. She paired the obvious defenses with the obvious attacks, so it was easy to lure her into a series of moves and then score a hit by breaking the pattern. Each time it happened, Taryn got mad, as though Jude were flubbing the steps of a dance rather than winning.
"Come here," Madoc called to Jude across the silvery expanse of grass.
She walked to him, sword slung over her shoulders. The sun was just setting, but faeries are twilight creatures, and their day was not even half done. The sky was streaked with copper and gold. She inhaled a deep breath of pine needles. For a moment, she felt as though she were just a kid learning a new sport.
"Come spar," he said when Jude got closer. "Both of you girls against this old redcap." Taryn leaned against her sword, the tip of it sinking into the ground. She wasn't supposed to hold it that way—it wasn't good for the blade—but Madoc didn't reprimand her.

4.CONCLUSION

The “Book Hub” has been developed to override the problems prevailing in the practicing manual system. This software is supported to eliminate and in some cases reduce the hardships faced by this existing system. Moreover this system is designed for a particular need to carry out operation in a smooth and effective manner.

The project shows the flow of each and every transaction which is being carried out by the desired user successfully thus giving him the desired result. This website provides easy to read book at any time in any where. Through this website user can select different categorys of book and the users can enter a uniquely portable magic.
